features

Health literacy: socially situating community-based research 3

by Julie Green

A research project with a group of parents in public housing in inner Melbourne examines the role of literacy in their development of health-related knowledge.

Literacy as translation 8

by Margaret Somerville

The concept of multiliteracies involves moving between different modes of literacy, and this in itself is an act of translation.

Finding the threads for a strong weave 12

by Maree Keating

Retrenched textile workers used their solidarity and sense of community to embark on a storytelling project that was launched exactly 12 months later.

regulars

Practical Matters 16

'Have a Spell' is not an offer from a crone hunched over a boiling cauldron. It is far more powerful, being an energetic and pacey practical guide to the art of teaching spelling.

Technology Matters 19

Is a blog, a blue tooth or a podcast something to do with whales? Do you create a digital story using your fingers? Debbie Soccio explains some of the latest classroom technology.

Open Forum 21

Dianne Parslow discusses the question of qualifications for teaching the new CGEA, and Lynne Matheson talks about issues to do with implementing it.

Foreign Correspondence 25

Debbie Soccio reports on the offline and online aspects of the Canadian education system.

Beside the Whiteboard 29

Sam Jackson thought he'd supplement his retirement in Thailand as a casual teacher holding English conversation classes at a nearby high school. That's about as casual as it got ...
