Committee News

1. Update

On 23 August, Lynne Matheson joined many people from ACE and ACFE at an afternoon tea to farewell Sian Lewis, ACFE Executive Director for the past two and a half years. ACFE Chairperson, Rowena Allen spoke of the achievements and impact of Sian, in particular the launch of the Learn Local branding. Sian spoke warmly of her time with ACFE and her passion for education and her commitment to always have the learner as the focus. VALBEC would like to thank Sian for her support and wish her well for the future.

The cuts to ACFE staffing and shift to the Pathways and Participation Division of DEECD will be monitored with interest.

Paul Rawlinson reported to the committee about a Diabetes Australia pilot program for at risk CALD learners, that has begun at Glenroy NLC using ESL frameworks units and team teaching with a Diabetes educator. This is an important health literacy program and we look forward to hearing about its progress.

VALBEC committee members Sandra Wolfe and Sandie Forbes will attend the 2012 Victorian Learn Local Awards on 7 Sept. This event provides a great opportunity to celebrate excellence and the achievements of the Learn Local community.

The next committee meeting will be held on Wednesday 19 September. We welcome feedback and ideas so please send to info@valbec.org.au

Fine Print

As we approach the end of the year it seemed like a fine time to ask our notable practitioners and academics to reflect and comment on adult learning and literacy, teaching and curriculum frameworks, and diversity. The result is an exciting line-up of writers busy creating some great reading that will hold you enthralled over the summer. Become a member to receive your copy of Fine Print.

9. VALBEC's response to The Sunday Age item

Letter published in The Sunday Age, 26 August, in response to <http://www.theage.com.au/lifestyle/you-cant-change-your-life-if-you-cant-read-20120816-24a6e.html>

The right to read ( The Age edited version from our original letter)

WE ARE very sorry to hear that Sam De Brito had such a frustrating experience seeking assistance for his friend with reading and writing difficulties (All Men Are Liars, M, 19/8). We understand the sensitive situation many prospective adult literacy students experience when seeking assistance. Often it is a relative or close friend who takes the initiative, as De Brito did, to seek out an adult literacy course or tutoring program. Fortunately most do not have the negative experience he did when trying to access a class. Some of the success stories have been published by the Victorian Adult Literacy and Basic Education Council (VALBEC) in A Fuller Sense of Self, available on our website, valbec.org.au. Our general advice is to use Google to search for local classes. However, as De Brito pointed out, while he could do a Google search, his friend could not. This goes to the heart of the question of what services the government is offering people like his friend. Federal government funding for the Reading and Writing Hotline referral service has decreased in recent years. The Australian Council for Adult Literacy and other volunteer-based state organisations - that receive no funding and do not have the capacity to work as referral agencies - have campaigned hard for the hotline to be better funded and promoted.

The hotline has been successful in connecting many learners to providers in their local areas, where they have numerous [sic:Age wording, we wrote 'suitable'] adult education options, such as one-to-one tuition and classes in community or TAFE settings.

The issue of adult literacy is an important one. We are pleased that De Brito found a program in the end. But he makes it clear we have more work to do.

John Radalj, co-president, VALBEC
